Description
Provide a short description of the event and its activities.
The fourth workshop "Youth and politics", addressed to people entering adulthood, was also held in Mińsk Mazowiecki. During the workshops, we learned about young people's attitude to politics, social involvement and participation in elections. During the introduction to the workshop topic, we talked about the fact that it is older people who decide what the world will look like, and therefore also the future of young people. There are fewer young people than older people, and they vote less often - so they are even more deprived of their voice and the ability to decide about themselves. The main conclusion of the work in the first part of the workshop was that there is a group of young people interested in politics, but they are so disgusted by it that they do not participate in elections. Young people associate politics with quarrels, affairs, scandals and aggression. Following the political world can be stressful. On the other hand, staying up to date with what is happening in politics may be like following a TV series, which is deepened by the medialization of politics in social media and the strong presence of political threads in the memosphere.

Another thing that was repeated: young people are overstimulated, they live in anxiety and uncertainty, they feel fear of adulthood and responsibility. They do not want to confront adult life, make political decisions and take responsibility for the future of their country. Some of them prefer to live in safe ignorance and focus only on themselves. [exercise “Personas”]

Therefore, it is important that politicians start talking to young people and presenting them with solutions that will respond to their real needs. And for politics to be closer and more understandable to them, and not something they know from memes. [exercise “Reverse Attention Strategy”]
